Water Resources Law 27-29 September 2017

Short course led by Professor Alex Gardner

Applicable for both lawyers and non-lawyers, the workshop program introduces the main legal principles governing the management of water resources and discusses the legal effect of the National Water Policy reforms that are proposed for Western Australia. Participants will also become familiar with the principal legal and policy materials applied in the management of water resources in Western Australia, including insights into the policy guidance for the preparation of the Water Resources Management Bill being drafted by the Government of Western Australia.

There will be six half day sessions comprising a seminar style mix of lecture and discussion exercises, with guest expert contributors, covering the topics:

- the institutional framework and objectives of Water Resources Law
- the nature of access rights and duties relating to water resources
- water allocation planning
- administration of statutory water entitlements and water trading
- catchment and waterways management
- legal perspectives on mining and water: adaptive management, state agreements and mine dewatering

Workshop materials will be distributed in electronic format. Much of the content of the course aligns with the treatise by A Gardner, R Bartlett and J Gray, Water Resources Law, (LexisNexis) 2009, which was described by Justice Curthoys, Preseidnt of the State Administrative Tribunal of WA, in Ord Irrigation Cooperative Ltd and Department of Water [2017] WASAT 85 as 'a very useful analysis of water law in Australia'.
